A BEAR STORY .- [From the Southern Californian.]-Walter, the renowned bear-hunting satlor, has deserted his camp in the Tejon mountains, where for two weeks he has been snowed in, with nothing to eat, except flour, for most of the time. Just before the snow came on he started out for a deer. The weather had been warm for several days, and the deer kept well upon the hills. At last be wounded one, and followed it for a mile, when it gave out, and he soon had it dressed. But he was four miles from camp, and he could only carry one quarter of it, with his rifle, having the mountains to climb. As he crossed the creek, with his load strung with his belt-strap over his shoulders, he sat down to wash his hands. On looking up he saw something pulling at the venison be had left banging to a sapling. He was not more than fifty yards away, and he rose to his feet for a better look, and saw a grizzly busy making a square meal. He could not resist drawing his rifle on him and looking through the sights. The bear did not see him. After taking aim for some time and thinking he could make a tolerably sure thing with an ounce ball, stooping occasionally to look over his gun and take a better measure of the beast, he drew a fine sight, waited an instant till the broadside of the face was well toward him, then touched the trigger. The bear bounded in the air as if it had been shot out of the gun itself, and Walter at the same time bounded for a tree. He had no more than caught a limb before he saw the bear was making toward him. Up the tree he went, the quarter of venison still strapped to his back. He had hardly reached his length above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the bear, as if just above the ground before the saw the bear was making toward him. PARISIAN THEATRES .- Grace Greenwood writes from Paris : For the benefit or amusement of the few distinguished Americans who have never visited Paris, I will venture to give a little ides of the way French theaares are managed, or rather to note down a few obvious peculiarities. Everywhere, as you enter a theatre, you come first upon three gentlemen, seated in a row, behind a long table or desk. These are Messieurs les Controleurs, to whom all tickets and orders must be presented for inspection, and all inquiries or appeals addressed. They are usually elderly men, of sternly serious aspect, and in their black dress-suits look solemn Bench, Ancus, Minos, and Rhadsmanthus. With the exception of the Francais and the Grand Opera all the theatres employ women for ushers—nice, decent bodies, though not lovely to look upon, with near stuff gowns and very gay caps. If they sacrifice on the soberness of their general attire they wreak them-nelves on their bonnets, which are stunning affairs, mostly composed of ribbons. Profound plak is the prevailing color for all ages and complexions. Your ouvreuse always offers to disembarrass you of your wraps, and kindly insists on furnishing you with a little wooden foot-stool, which, by its size and tendency to hop about and disappear mysteriously, recalls the old name of "cricket." No seats we have ever had in stalls, bo xes, or galleries have seemed to us so easy and comfortable as corresponding places in our own best theatres and opera-houses, nor has the ventilation seemed so good. But, then, more space is here given to stairways, corridors, and foyers, and it is the custom for all the world to go out for a promenade and a change of air between the acts. At the Italian Theatre and at most of the others there is ordinarily no orchestra. The rising of the curtain is not signalled by the tinkling of a bell, but by a series of startling "coups" or thumps, reminding one of the awesome knocking at the gate in "Macbeth." All the theatres we have visited have a bright, gay appearance, not quite so profusely lighted as our own, and so less trying to the eyes, and, withal, an air of singular neatness and good preservation, the secret of which was revealed to us one night at the Gaite, when, baving lingered a few minutes after the perform ance, we saw the entire corps of ouvreuses shrouding the seats and loges in voluminous dusters, and hanging out their banners of brown linen on the outer well of the gilded balconies. The frank, fearless economies of this people take my heart. Half our extravagance is miserable cowardice.

HIS MEANS OF SUPPORT. - The Toronto Leader relates the following: At the Division Court yesterday a witness was under examination in the case of an unpaid account. Judge Boyd put the question to him, "What is your occupation?" The witness did not seem to understand the meaning of the word "occupation," and answered with Eh!" The Judge: "What do you do for a living?" Witness: "Oh, my wife's a dressmaker!"

The custom of appointing young lawyers to defend paurer criminals received a backset the other day in our District Court. His Honer, Judge Noonan, bad appointed two young lawyers to defend an old and experienced horse-thief. After inspecting his counsel for some time in silence, the prisoner rose in his place and addressed the

"Air them to defend mef"

"Yes, sir," said his Honor. "Both of them?" inquired the prisoner. "Both of them," responded the Judge. "Then I plead guilty." And the poor devil took his seat and signed heavily.—San Antonio Herald.
